

Opportunities after a Law Degree in India

Although Law may be seen as one of the regular degrees in India, it's not so! A Law degree in India has a distinctive selling proposition. This statement can be better understood by knowing the fact that the only these graduates can work in the offices of all the organs of the Indian Government: Legislative, Executive, and Judicial. Thus, one has to understand that a degree in Law will open up the horizons to a wide range of careers that other degrees cannot. Read the following article to know what opportunities will a law degree in India will provide you...

Entering the Field:

Students who are aspiring to pursue a career in law can enter the field in two ways. They can either take a 3-year course after their graduation (any discipline) or a 5-year course after their higher secondary. After successfully completing your 3-year course, you will be designated with a Bachelor of Law (LLB) title. The five-year course will be an integrated course, which gives you expertise in two different streams. It could be BA LLB (Arts), BBA LLB (Business), B.Com LLB (Commerce), and B.Sc LLB (Hons.). Further to this, the law graduates can opt for specializing in any particular field of law. Specializations can be done during your Masters, M.Phil, or Ph.D degrees. Examples of specializations include:

- Criminal
- Civil Litigation
- Legal Analyst
- Document Drafting
- Legal Journalist
- Legal Advisor
- Government Lawyer
- Judge

Future Job Prospects of Lawyers:

Law is a rapidly growing profession. With the events of globalization and liberalization, the field is expected to get further momentum as more and more law professionals will be needed to deal with the cases arising due to international trade and WTO. Currently, there are 10,00,000+ lawyers in the country and this number is growing with lakhs of new additions annually. The law professionals are enjoying a high esteem in a civil society for their valuable services, at all judiciary levels, namely,

- Trial Court
- High Court
- Supreme Court
- Quasi-Judicial Institutions

People with a law degree have plenty of opportunities, both in public, as well as private sectors. Below is the quick look on those opportunities:

Career Options after a Law Degree:

1. Legal Practitioner/Advisor/Advocate

Lawyers can take up roles as legal counselors or advisors for companies, individuals, and families. They can also take up roles as trustees in various organizations. With some additional qualification, they can also work as:

- Teachers
- Law Reporters
- Company Secretaries

2. Government Service

People with required education are employed for Government legal service in various posts. These officers can go up to the level of Secretary to the Indian Government in the due course of time, depending upon their eligibility. Legislative Counsels will also be recruited in official languages Wing for Hindi and other regional languages. While this is being done in the Legislative Department, similar posts are also available at the state governments' end. All such posts are generally filled by recruitment through Public Service Commission Examinations and UPSC examinations that are conducted from time to time.

3. Judiciary

When it comes to Judiciary, the lowest cadre posts will be filled by recruitment through State's Public Service Commission exams. Alternately, the recruitment process will be undertaken under the guidance of the High Court.

4. Teaching

The graduates with excellent academic records and higher degrees can take up teaching roles in universities and institutes offering courses related to law. There is a growing scope for visiting professors too!

5. Writing and Journalism

If an individual is quite familiar with the law and its procedures and has a flair for penning it down, then the person can take up writing roles. The writing may range from law books, commentaries, reports, journals, lexicons, and so on.

6. Outsourcing

This practice refers to the services that are obtained from an outside firm. This can be also called as off-shoring if the outsourced firm is based outside India. This particular field is becoming more popular today, with the increasing popularity of outsourcing.

Thus, the individuals with a law degree don't have to fear about the future and earnings as the field is in higher demand today and the future prospects are also good. To boost a lawyer's career and to help with him/her to perform the job in a smarter way, there are various tools available. One such app is called "Lawyer Diary", which comes with lots of exclusive features. With this app loaded to your iOS or Android device, you will start dealing with your career in law from a different perspective. Click here to know about the app now!